More than 35 artists from Florida, California and Chicago created pieces from ferocious dragon heads to wistful, wide-eyed ceramic rabbits and intricately beaded statement necklaces for Florida CraftArt's exhibition "Creatures Wild and Wooly." Awards were presented at the opening reception on June 30, attended by 250 art lovers.

The exhibition's judge was Michael Killoren, the new executive director of the Morean Arts Center. "The works are so imaginative with gorgeous detail," he says of the first-place winner Marilyn Rackleman's mixed-media sculpture which sold to a collector at the opening. I love the narrative on Vadim Malkin's 'The Joy Ride'," he adds. "There are layers of meaning, and the craftsmanship is beautiful."

'The Joy Ride' won third place and is a playful 27-inch tall ceramic sculpture of a cow balancing a pig on its back, who has a mouse on his head.

The national juried exhibition showcases 74 works of original art based on creatures—wild, exotic, domestic, imaginary and mythical. Best of show was given to Diane Lublinski of Pembroke Pines for "Remember Your Path," an intense, dramatic ceramic sculpture measuring nearly four-feet high.

Second place went to Ray Bennett of Riverview, Florida, for a terrifying dragon-head trophy he sculpted in papier mâché, clay and mixed media. "I wanted to capture the essence of a dragon through sculpture, and needed them to look as lifelike as possible," he says. "I want you to feel like one of these dragons will take a snap at you."

Honorable mentions were awarded to Sarasota artist Taylor Robenalt for 'The Wall of Lies Between Us,' and St. Petersburg artists Alicia Diem for 'My home is my castle,' and Chomick + Meder for 'Avine Degas.'

The exhibition's entry is framed by a magical portal arch, entitled "Fiber Forest," that was created by Roseline Young and Marci Mills, and other fiber artists from the Ft. Myers, Cape Coral area.

"People are amazed at the wild and imaginative creatures, as well as an almost life-size realistic male lion created from agave fiber by Anne Andersson. It makes people stop in their tracks outside our window," says Executive Director, Katie Deits. "Adults and children both will enjoy our programming such as docent tours at 1:15 p.m. on Wednesdays, rock-painting workshops and creature-inspired dramatic readings."

"We are pleased to dedicate this exhibition to the memory of the late sculptor Paul Eppling who was a Florida CraftArt artist," says Liz Rogers, Gallery Manager. "His whimsical, magical creatures fashioned from auto parts, farm machinery, blown glass or discarded metal scraps can be seen around St. Petersburg in parks and on top of the city's maintenance building."

The exhibit will run through August 12 with a closing reception, People's Choice Awards and special appearances by Southeastern Guide Dogs. Other events during the exhibition are rock-painting workshops and a writing class and dramatic readings with Keep St. Pete Lit.
